It was impossible to see a ship's length ahead into the snow curtain, and when the Stephanos' captain thought he was within a mile of the stranded hunters, he lay to and kept his whale going in the hope that they might be guided towards him.

An hour passed and not a man reported, he concluded and had reached their own ship. But the blizzard had no wireless, and all that day and Wednesday, while the blizzard raged with unabated fury, the fleet remained in ignorance of the fate of the 150 men marooned on the floes.

On Thursday the weather cleared, and the Bellaventure was making ready to start her men after seals when a lookout reported men on the ice. Captain Randell immediately ordered every available man on the ship to the rescue. The main party of castaways were four miles away, on a broken field of ice. The Bellaventure was driven toward them with all possible speed, but so bad were ice conditions that it required nine hours to cover the four miles.

Men Beach Castaways.

In the meantime, Captain Randell's men had reached the floes. Only a few of the hardest were courageous and able to help themselves. Many were in a stupor. Some were taken others had been stricken with ice blindness. Many bodies were found frozen so fast in the ice that pickaxes were necessary to chop them out. Two of the survivors were nearly mad from their own sufferings and from grief. Each had watched a brother die in his arms.

By good fortune, thirty of the Newfoundlanders, who had not strayed far from the coast, had been able to reach their ship, else the death list undoubtedly would have been greater.

In the meantime, the Stephanos had worked with striking distance, and had picked up a few of the survivors and recovered a few bodies.

After the snowbound hounds had been searched for more bodies, the Bellaventure turned her prow homeward, battling severe ice conditions and a second gale nearly all the way to port.

The scene at the Bellaventure dock was heartrending. The cries of joy with which the living were hailed were torn to shreds when it was seen that nearly all were pitifully crippled from freezing.

As the dead were identified, they were placed on a special train to be sent to Bonavista Bay, in the vicinity of which most of the victims lived. Many families have lost their only breadwinners, and the 173 persons on the missing northern vessel have met disaster, whole communities left without wage-earners. More than 1,000 women and children, with little or no savings, will be dependent on charity.

If the Southern Cross is not reached by sundown on Monday, it was said tonight, she would be officially posted as lost with all hands.

The steamer Kyle, equipped by the government, was sweeping the seas southward and westward from Cape Race to-night, seeking trace of the missing ship. At midnight no word had been received.

SHIP BEARS BODIES OF SIXTY-NINE DEAD

Also Fifty Crippled Survivors of Disaster That Overtook Seal Hunters Reach St. John's.

NO NEWS OF SOUTHERN CROSS

Feared That This Steamer, With Crew of 170 Men, May Have Been Lost.

St. John's, N. F., April 4.—Amid silence like a funeral hush, the sealing steamer Bellaventure steamed slowly up the harbor at dusk to-day, bearing sixty-nine of the dead and fifty of the crippled survivors of the disaster that overtook hunters from the steamer Newfoundland on the ice floes near Belle Isle Straits in last Tuesday's blizzard.

Thirteen of the living were removed to a hospital in a critical condition. Several others were seriously ill, and all but one of the remainder bore scars of their thirty-eight-hour exposure to the cold and gale, with seventy-seven of their companions missing. This uninjured survivor was stricken blind after being picked up; but it is believed he will recover his sight.

Five thousand persons, many of them relatives of the victims, had lined every vantage point along the harbor front in time waiting for the Bellaventure to return, and found no news of the missing sealers. Southern Cross, carrying 170 men. Not a word has been heard from the latter vessel since she was seen driving before the storm Tuesday morning. Hope aroused by reports that she had made harbor were dashed when investigation proved an error in identification had been made, and that the Southern Cross, the sister steamer to Lieutenant Shackleton, the British explorer, used on one of his Antarctic expeditions, weathered the blizzard. No wreckage has been reported.

In the absence of Governor Davidson and Premier Morris, the acting vice, Mr. Bennett, directed the work of rescue of the dead and wounded. Every physician and nurse in the city volunteered for service. They were aided by sounds from the naval reserve ship Calypso, and various military organizations. The new Grenfell Institute was turned into a morgue.

Disaster Unavoidable.

The disaster which overtook the Newfoundlanders was unavoidable, according to Captain Randell, of the Bellaventure. The blizzard dawned somewhat overcast, but with no hint of blizzard conditions, he said, so that it was quite permissible to put men on the ice after seals. There were four ships within sight of each other, the Newfoundland, Stephanos, Florizel and Bellaventure. These had a total of 1,000 men out on the ice. His own hunters had encountered a small party of seals soon after leaving the ship, and were out for only an hour.

The storm broke with typical Arctic suddenness. The hunters from the Bellaventure and the Florizel were fortunate enough to reach their ships safely. The Stephanos, meanwhile, steamed towards the spot where her crew had been seen before the snow shut in. This took her away from the Newfoundland's group, who were far from their own. As soon as the Stephanos noticed by the Florizel's captain the safety of her men, she leaped back into the storm to pick up the Newfoundlanders' hunters.

It was impossible to see a ship's length ahead into the snow curtain, and when the Stephanos' captain thought he was within a mile of the stranded hunters, he lay to and kept his whale going in the hope that they might be guided towards him.
